The Rwanda Journal of Medicine and Health Sciences is a peer-reviewed journal of the University of Rwanda that aims to publish three times a year. It publishes topics of special interest and those that have relevance to health-related fields including but not limited to medicine, pharmacy, dentistry, nursing, public health, nutrition, health management, and other health sciences. The journal accepts quantitative, qualitative and mixed method studies each evaluated for their scientific rigor and validity. The following types of manuscripts will be considered for publication in this journal: original research, review articles, short communications, letters to the editor, perspective articles, lessons from the field, editorials, case reports. The journal may publish supplements of conference proceedings or special editions.
